

SECTION 3: Dismissal/Separation for Academic Reasons after Probation.

3.1 Failure to Make Satisfactory Progress.

- 3.1.1 A student may be placed on probation for failing to make satisfactory progress:
- a failure to complete six (6) graduate credits per rolling three semester period (including summer) toward their program;
 - unsatisfactory grades (including incompletes, grades of D, D+, and D);
 - failure to consult with their advisor when requested;
 - failure to establish a graduate advisor committee;
 - failure to develop an official, approved degree program;
 - failure to establish a groundwork or an acceptable thesis or dissertation;
 - failure of comprehensive and/or qualifying examinations;
 - failure to meet departmental collections or to meet the university's requirements;
 - failure to successfully defend a thesis or dissertation.
- 3.1.2 A department may establish their own program requirements and standards in the field.
- 3.1.3 Satisfactory academic progress also involves the student's maintenance of the standards of academic and professional integrity applicable in a particular discipline or program. Failure to maintain these standards may result in a student's removal from admission to a program.
- 3.1.4 A department is responsible for monitoring academic performance and progress of graduate students at least once per academic year.
- 3.1.5 If a department determines that a student is not making satisfactory progress in their degree, it may request the Dean of the Graduate College ("Graduate Dean") place the student on probation. A student is placed on academic probation if the student receives a failing grade or fails an comprehensive exam or oral defense attempt.
- 3.1.6 The department must document and provide specific requirements and/or conditions including deadlines, which the student must complete to be removed from probation.
- 3.1.7 The department's request to place the student on probation must be approved by the Graduate College which will notify the student in writing that the student is on academic probation (the "Academic Probation Notice").
- 3.1.8 The Academic Probation Notice shall outline with the student the dates by which he/she must do so in order to remain in the graduate program. The Academic Probation Notice shall also outline the conditions of probation which the student does not meet. The conditions of probation which will be deemed to be a cause for removal from the graduate program shall be outlined in the Graduate College appeal process including filling the appeal form, and provide the
